

Self-Employment Requirements for Child Care Subsidy

All self-employed applicants, including independent contractors, must complete this questionnaire. One questionnaire is to be completed for each applicant that is self-employed or working as an independent contractor. If both applicants are working for the same business only one questionnaire is required. This questionnaire provides information to support your child care subsidy application and will be used to determine your eligibility for this service. Self-employed applicants must be able to demonstrate that the amount of child care subsidy provided corresponds to the time spent engaged in the self-employment activity and that the hours of operation warrant child care.

For the purposes of child care subsidy, a self-employed person is defined as anyone that is both the owner and operator of a business. Whether the sole proprietor of the business or in partnership with others, they benefit from the profits and suffer from the losses of the business. If you are an independent contractor, meaning that you perform contract work for a third-party and do not have CPP, EI, or Income Tax deductions taken from the source, ensure that you check off the appropriate box in the business information section as this type of self-employment is assessed differently.

What You Need To Know

- Your business income must be declared to Canada Revenue Agency annually
- Undeclared cash jobs are not eligible for child care subsidy
- Child care subsidy will be based on the hours you are engaged in your self-employment activities.
- Your business must be able demonstrate a net profit in order to qualify for subsidy.
- New businesses will be given up to one full tax year to demonstrate earnings of at least minimum wage based on the hours of operation.
- If approved, but business income later declines, child care subsidy can reduced or terminated.
- Eligible hours of child care will be based on your gross business income.
